Key Takeaways

- Count the bills for the features you want. A practice plan, a course library, and third party simulator software can have separate fees.
- Use the right billing window. The MLM2PRO now comes with a 21 day Core trial, not a free year, so a 36 month total includes three annual Core charges.
- Compare features as well as totals. A low cost plan may provide ball data while club data, longer history, video, or course play sits in another tier.
- Keep plan prices in context. The prices below are 2026 examples, not guaranteed 2027 renewal amounts.
- Start with the intended use. Our golf launch monitor buying guides can help frame a shortlist around practice, data, and simulator use.
- Separate recurring charges from one time purchases. A one time software purchase belongs in the upfront column, not the annual renewal column.

What belongs in a three year launch monitor total?

How to verify a plan for your exact setup

Membership rules can depend on the device, software connection, and intended activity. Use the manufacturer's current plan rules for the exact model and connection, then price practice, course play, and advanced data as separate scenarios.

Before treating a third party simulator connection as part of the budget, identify the required membership tier, compatible software version, operating system, device, and any connector fee. Compatibility is not the same as included access, and a manufacturer plan can stack with a separate simulator software charge.

Our [Launch Monitor Pro] perspective is straightforward: compare the complete setup, not a headline device price. An indoor simulator plan can include a monitor, membership, computer, software, display, and room preparation, while a range practice setup may need far fewer paid components.
